Moral awareness is very necessary

By WILLIAM L. TRIMYER

WANTED! MORAL AWARENESS

Lesson for October 14, 1984

Bible Study Passages: Philipians 2:1-13

INTRODUCTION

Have you ever noticed how some folks' public self is characteristically different from their private self? This may be true of all of us to one degree or another. The "appearance" we give on Sunday morning is sometimes markedly different from our appearance on Monday. Perhaps you have heard someone remark, "I don't go to church because I don't want to be a hypocrite." Such indictments against the church have some merit.

Paul's writings often focus upon the Christian's behavior. The author of James also emphasizes the importance of balancing faith with behavior. Morality is a crucial ingredient in the Christian faith. The way we live our life style does have an impact upon our Christian witness. When we claim to be religious but ignore the suffering around us, we are not following Christ. When we claim to be religious but engage in unethical business practices, we are not following Christ.

Our lives are to be mirrors in which we reflect the presence of Christ. Moral awareness means being alert to how our behavior may influence other people. It also means challenging those whose selfish interests oppress other people.

Respond to the following questions:

1. Do you believe the Christian's private self must be congruent to their public self?

2. Can a person be a Christian without a personal morality?

3. Can a person be moral but not have a personal religion?

A CALL TO LOVE [Philippians 2:1-4]

Paul calls all Christians into a harmonious relationship. Dissension among the early Christian "troops" was sometimes evident. Such dissension could easily inflict a hindrance upon the growth and spread of Christianity.

Paul encouraged the Philippian Christians to "make his joy complete" by living and working together in a spirit of unity. The spirit of unity is essential for the survival of marriages, friendships, denominations, and churches. This does not mean that disagreements have no place, for wherever two or three humans are gathered together there is bound to be an occasional confrontation. The important thing is that disagreements do not stand in the way of unity. There can be unity among diversity, a fact that some people have yet to affirm.

CHRIST OUR MODEL [Philipians 2:5-11]

When we look at Christ we see one who displayed a spirit of unity in all that he did. He was at one with the Father. While he did challenge the civil authorities of his day, his purpose was to bring all people into harmony with the Kingdom of God. In his earthly life, in death, and in his resurrection, Christ assumed the sacrificial role to dramatize his unifying authority.

BEING A GOOD EXAMPLE [Philipians 2:12-13]

Christians are called of Christ to be good examples in life style, behavior, and in word. This does not mean we are to be or act artificial, for artificial Christianity can be spotted very easily by the unbelieving or skeptical world.

The Christian faith is not a commodity we shop for at a religious market. Faith is something we receive through our acknowledgment of Christ as Lord. Faith must be nurtured and "worked out" through our individual initiative. We do not have a part to play in the Lord's purpose for his people.

Respond to the following questions:

1. Do you believe the Christian's private self must be congruent to their public self?

2. Can a person be a Christian without a personal morality?

3. Can a person be moral but not have a personal religion?

KEITH JENNINGS TAKES A LONG HARD LOOK ..... Can you eat it? Will it bite? "I'd better keep hands off," is probably what he's thinking. The flower he is carefully observing is an unusually large yellow dahlia grown by Mrs. Louise Henderson of Evergreen. In addition to dahlias, Louise is known for the other beautiful flowers she has grown over the years. This dahlia measured just under 12 inches across. Keith is the son of Danette and Dale Jennings of Pamplin. Danette is typesetter for the Times-Virginian. (Photo by Cindy Bollinger)

Part I

Being safe at home

Good News For Homemakers

This is Part I of a two-part article on home safety. Not one of us would like to become a statistic that we read about concerning home accidents. Safety measures that you can accomplish in just a short length of time and at little cost in your home can minimize home accidents. Accidents happen frequently around the home. In a split second someone gets hurt. Then looking back, it is usually seen that the accident could have been prevented. Among accidents are falls, cuts, burns, hazardous substances ingested or splashed into the eyes or onto the skin. These are some of the biggest offenders in our household.

Take necessary steps now to accident-proof you home as much as possible and to make safety awareness a habit. Properly cleanliness and storage techniques, regular maintenance checks and improved safety devices are the methods to use. Suggestions in each category will be given. Depending on your family make-up and lifestyle, other ideas may come to mind as you consider ways to minimize the potential for home accidents. Special precautions need to be taken to protect babies and young children.

Injuries are often sustained while working around the home. Improper clothing, such as loose sleeves, floppy sandals and other items can cause you to fall. Choose well-fitted shoes, rather than those floppy sandals, for good balance and foot protection, and certainly don't have the floppy sandals on the day that you wash the curtains and put them back up at the window. Wear comfortable tailored clothes, rather than those that are loose-fitting or with wide flowing sleeves that catch easily on drawer handles and other items that can turn over, spill and crash into the floor.

SENSIBLE HOUSEKEEKPING PRACTICES CAN SAVE YOU MANY ACCIDENTS. Trying to get things done too quickly can be hazardous. For example, it is better to make two trips to carry groceries and laundry or household effects, than to carry a load so high you can't see where you are going or so heavy you may drop it, strain yourself or lose you balance. Take the time to get out a step-stool or ladder rather than rely on something less sturdy, like a folding chair when trying to reach high places. Avoid over-reaching when standing on a step stool or ladder to wash windows or walls.

Minimize danger by keeping things clean. Wipe up spills on
